

Sheila S. Coronel is executive director of the Manila-based Philippine Center for Investigative Journalism, an independent, nonprofit agency specializing in investigative reporting. The Center has published two dozen books and over 200 articles in major Philippine newspapers since its founding in 1989. Coronel is also editor of i, the Center's quarterly investigative reporting magazine. She previously worked for the Philippine Panorama Magazine and The Manila Chronicle and also filed reports from Manila for The New York Times. In 1993, she published a collection of reportage entitled, Coups, Cults and Cannibals. She has also edited and co-authored several books, including the PCIJ's 1998 book documenting corruption, Pork and other Perks: Corruption and Governance in the Philippines.

In 2003, Coronel received the Ramon Magsaysay Award for Journalism, Literature and the Creative Communication Arts. In 2001, she was given named the Philippines' Outstanding Print Journalist. The same year, she was elevated to the Hall of Fame of the Jaime V. Ongpin Awards for Investigative Journalism, after winning the top award four times in 12 years.